Santiago Congress to Discuss "Diminution in the Consumption of Alcoholic Beverages"

Special from Monitor Bureau WASHINGTON, Feb. 3-Prohibition is on the agenda of the Fifth Pan-American Congress to be held in Santiago, Chile, next month. The subject will come before the convention in this form: "Consideration of measures adapted to secure progressive diminution in the consumption of alcoholic beverages.' Though the United States is the only one of the 21 republics in which the use of alcohol for beverage purposes is entirely prohibited, many of the other nations of the hemisphere have taken steps in the direction of regulating the sale and consumption of intoxicating beverages, with the trend unmistakably in the direction of plete eradication of the liquor traffic. Seven of the other American nations hosides the United States have taken definite action, either through legislation or Executive order, looking to a limitation of alcoholic beverages; in at least two other Pan-American countries, states or departments have taken cussion of the prohibition question.

National Laws Adopted

In Mexico and Columbia, certain post. states have passed legislation on the subject, and efforts to reduce alcoholic consumption have been made in Bolivia, Ecuador, and Salvador.

Perhaps the most important step taken so far by the Chilean Government has been the closing of the bars from Saturday evening to Monday morning, and on all holidays, with regulations to stop the illicit sale of liquors. The sale of liquor in mining and nitrate camps has been prohibited, while it is also unlawful to establish bars within a certain distance of churches and educational buildings. In Peru a law was passed by the National Congress in 1919 prohibiting during Saturdays and Sundays the sale and consumption of alcoholic drinks, and including establishments subject to this law, hotels, inns, cafés, bars, and other places.

Uruguay has a national law regulating the use, sale and consumption of liquor, while by decree of March 30, 1921, the consumption of alcoholic liquors on the naval vessels of the Republic was prohibited, and by presidential decree of Jan. 18, 1922, this was extended to all army units and buildings.

SOMERVILLE RENTS CALLED TOO HIGH

Six-Family Houses Had Rates Boosted From $30 to $50-State Commission Finding

Evidence of financial manipulation resulting in exorbitant rents is found by the special Massachusetts Commis-sion on the Necessaries of Life in a rent lower than that which he seeks to exact and recommends that he be confined to this return. creased to a demand for $50 beginning Dec. 1, 1922. Complaint was made to the commission and inquiry reveals several illuminating details of manip-

The present owner of record is Roland Litchfield of 50 Davis Avenue, Brookline, but he admits no control over the property. The rents are col-lected by the law firm of Eaton & McKnight, who, the commission says, appear to be in control of the property. Mr. McKnight is Edwin T. Mc Knight, former president of the State ditioned or repaired by the road's new Senate. The assessed value of the shop forces, which is five above the property is $58,500, but four mortaverage turned out by the old shop gages totaling $62,425, are recorded forces in the three and a half year period immediately preceding the strike of last summer, according to an Park Trust Company of Worcester, official statement from the New $6000; third, Park Trust Company of Haven today. #### COAL DEALERS ARE CATCHING UP

Progress Made With Large Volume of Small Orders

Substantial progress is being made by Greater Boston coal dealers in catching up with the large volume of small orders which have been accumulating during the past 45 days of diffi-cult traffic conditions, it was said today at the office of the Massachu-setts Emergency Fuel Administrator. With dealers' delivery trucks working at capacity seven days a week, it is felt that householders no longer will be compelled to pay independent truckmen high prices for hauling coal which the dealers claimed they could not deliver with any certainty. dealers will take off but $1 per ton to offset delivery costs. One fuel authority reports that dealers, in many cases, are able to increase their profits by selling coal at their yards at $1 less than the delivered price, but at the State House the $1 reduction is regarded as about as much as dealers can be reasonably expected to make. One coal dealer, who practically ceased making deliveries for a period, said he had long since sold all of his sleighs and horses; his motor trucks he declined to put out to "back the snowdrifts and icy roads," since this resulted in expensive repair bills. He said he preferred to let the independent truckmen break their trucks than INCREASED POWER to send his out until the roads were

Decline of 40 Per Cent Since 1916 Recorded in Boston

Arrests for drunkenness in the 10 cities of the Metropolitan district of Massachusetts, as shown in the report Consumers are complaining that whereas the independent truckmen charge $2.50 to $4.50 per ton to haul coal to their homes in cases where the dealers' delivery equipment has been working at less than half capatity owing to snow-filled highways, the dealers will take off but $1 per ton per cent.

The number of arrests for drunkenness made in 1922 was 420 in the cities of the district, as compared with 320 in 1921. In 1916 the metropolitan police made 692 arrests for the same offense while in 1915 they took 650 into custody for being intoxicated.

That arrests for drunkenness have increased this year over last, has been shown by officials who have analyzed conditions to be due largely to the fact that police now arrest for drunkenness when it is detected, while before prohibition it was the rule to He avoid making such arrests if possible.

There followed a vigorous protest CITY ARRESTS DROP that the War Department was medding in local affairs. Secretary Weeks FOR DRUNKENNESS was appealed to for the Department's stand; he demanded an explanation from General Howze and received this reply:

Myself and medical officers from Ft. Bliss and Beaumont hospitals appeared before an open session of the City Council at the request of the Administration as witnesses concerning the effect of vaccination on public health. Only interested in vaccination as affecting general public health, that of United States troops in vicinity and the co-ordination of army with civil government. No positive effort on our part to secure passage of any specific ordinance. The undersigned served no notice whatever on El Paso nor made any reference to any specific ordinance. Contrary to press reports, it was casually stated as desirable to have two additional regiments stationed at Ft. Bliss.

While it was admitted at the War Department that the army requires all officers and men to be vaccinated, and while Secretary of War Weeks in general regards vaccination as desirable, it was denied that the department had ever endeavored to force its views upon civil authorities.

By Special Cable BERLIN, Feb. 3 - In Germany things are moving in a circle these days. History is repeating itself. Just as the Philip Scheidemann Government went in the summer of 1919 so is the Cuno Government going now. In the best informed parliamentary and political circles here it is pre-dicted it is but a matter of weeks or perhaps days before the present Min-istry will step down and out and Wilhelmstrasse will know it no more.
While this has been already intimated in these dispatches the truthfulness of the forecast is more

ANGORA DEPUTIES EAGER FOR MOSUL

Occupation Demanded in Assembly—British Attacked By Special Cable

MYTILENE, Feb. 3-Turkish newspaper agencies report tumultuous sittings of the Angora Assembly. Kurdish and Turkish deputies violently attacked England for Lord Curzon's declarations at Lausanne concerning the alleged ignorance of the Kurdish deputies, and reference of the Mosul question to the League of Nations. They retorted arrogantly, and de-clared Mosul has to be occupied by force as was done in the case of Brusa and Smyrna.

The Kurdish deputies speaking so bitterly were those once deported to Malta by the British. A Constanti-nople Turkish paper, Tevhid, violently attacks the American Y. M. C. A., dubbing it a "proselyting organization," and fervently calling on the Turkish population to be cautious not to fall into the trap.

Instead of being shipped in the usual way, via Constantinople, they came through the Khyber Pass, by caravan and rail to Karachi, to Liverpool by the steamship Trafford Hall, thence by the steamship Darien direct to Boston.

The instructions under which our agent selected these Carpets were as follows:

"They must be of good quality, unwashed, free from imperfections, of a quality that will lay flat and not wrinkle, free from brilliant reds and white."

In every way this shipment surpasses expectations. It is by far the choicest lot of Afghan Carpets we have seen in years. In the beautiful colorings blues and oxblood reds predominate.

Massachusetts Parents to Renew Campaign Against Compulsory Law at Hearings This Week

Two bills involving the rights of parents to determine whether or not their children shall be subjected to vaccination as a requirement of school attendance will be considered next Thursday, at 10 a. m., by the Commit-tee of Public Health of the Massachusetts Legislature. One of the bills seeks to extend the practice of compulsory vaccination so as to include the private schools of the State, while the other would make it possible for parents or guardians, on request, to exempt their children from vaccina-

In anticipation of the large numbe of parents who would be affected by the proposed changes and are expected to be present, the hearing will be held in the Augustus P. Gardaer auditorium at the State House. As in previous years when similar issues before the General Court. it is expected that many will be on hand to register their opposition to compulsory medicine. Opponents to compulsory vaccination already are gathering their forces to appear at the State House.

One of the petitions is accompanied Senate Bill No. 126, filed by the Medical Liberty League, Inc. It is the same measure as that proposed last year, unfavorably reported by the committee and rejected after several weeks on the Senate table. The bill

Any child who has reached the age at which attendance at school is permitted or required, and who is otherwise eligible for enrollment, who presents a written statement, signed by either a parent or guardian, which declares that such parent clares that such parent or guardian is opposed to vaccination, shall not, as a condition precedent to admission to the public schools, be required to submit to vaccination, and shall be allowed to attend the public schools, except at the time of a threatened or actual outbreak of smallpox, when the school board may temporarily debar such child from the public schools.

This measure is widely supported by citizens who stand against dicta-tion by the medical fraternity. Every year, when the issue is before the Legislature, members of the committee and both branches of the Legislature find their personal mail considerably increased by letters from their constit-

AUTHORITIES DIFFER ON OPIUM PROBLEM

Sir John Jordan Urges Reduced Production; J. Campbell Seeks Control

GENEVA, Jan. 16 (Special Correspondence)—The Permanent Advisory Committee appointed by the League of Nations to assist it in the task of supervising the execution of the International Opium Convention has just concluded its fourth session at Geneva, at which it has gone into the whole question of the control of the traffic in opium and other dangerous drugs.

At its previous sessions the committee proposed certain measures, which have been adopted by the Assembly of the League instituting the use of import and export certificates by countries which have signed the convention and providing for the collection and examination of statistics supplied by various countries concerning medical and scientific require-

The sittings of the committee were held in private, the majority of the members considering that this tended to greater freedom of discussion, but it may be stated that two distinct points of view as to the best means of dealing with the drug problem manifested themselves, and in order to ascertain exactly what these points of view were, the representative of The Christian Science Monitor interviewed the principal protagonists of each. On the one hand there are those who claim that the only effective way of dealing with the matter is to reduce production, while on the other hand there are others who claim that it is impossible at present to limit production anywhere but in India, and limitation there would mean increase elsewhere.

Curtailed Production Urged

The representative of the firstnamed school is Sir John Jordan, who spent many years in China, and was British Envoy Extraordinary and British Plenipotentiary in Peking from 1906 to 1920. Sir John began by stating that over 10,000 chests, each containing 140 pounds of raw opium, are exported annually to Singapore, Hong Kong, Indo-China, Siam, and other places where there are Chinese, and he claimed that the convention was ineffective because it only pro-hibited the export of prepared opium and the raw opium was imported by these places and prepared on the spot. Of the four countries in the world producing opium—namely Turkey, Persia, India and China, only the first three exported, China producing exclusively for home consumption. In Sir John's view the convention was defective in that it provided for the control of production and distribution of raw oplum, but did not limit it. He

Turkey and Persia will probably be represented at the next session of the advisory committee as well as India, and I have suggested that the problem should be attacked from the point of view of production, and the only way is for these countries to reduce exports proportionately, that is to say gradually, in all of them.

So long as you produce opium it will find its way to the consumer.

The viewpoint of the advocates of

The viewpoint of the advocates of control was placed before the representative of The Christian Science Monitor by Mr. J. Campbell of the India Office of the British Government, formerly a civil servant attached to the Indian Government, and representing the Indian Government

Control Impossible

Mr. Campbell's contention is that effective control of production in Turkey and Persia is impossible. He Persia has signed the opium convention, but with the reservation that she does not agree to Article 3a. This article reads: "The contracting powers shall take measures to prevent the export of opium to all countries which shall have prohibited its entry." This is an essential point, and though she has signed with this reservation, she has not yet ratified. If India were to restrict production she would set herself up as a moral mentor to the Far East. From the first of January of this year no opium will be exported from India unless the Government of the country to which it goes states that it is wanted for legitimate purposes. It is for the Government of those countries to decide what are legitimate purposes.

The convention appears to be having a very powerful effect already, and there is an enormous decrease of imports wherever one turns. It has taken nine years to get this instrument going, and why should we discard it after only about a year's real working? If the convention were really applied the oplum problem would be solved.

AUSTRIA TO RAISE

UNIVERSITY FEES

Special from Monitor Bureau

LONDON, Jan. 12—News received in London from Vienna indicates that it is almost certain that Austrian University fees will be immediately raised from 900 to 3000 or 40000 kronen for Austrian students, and from 9000 to 30,000 or 40,000 kronen for foreigners. Several universities, and notably those of Innsbruck and Gratz, have protested against this proposal, as they believe it will greatly reduce the number of students.

It is also understood that the Vienna Council has decided to devote 112,000,000 kronen to cultural and charitable purposes. This amount will be divided among a great number of institutes of various kinds, but it is worth noting that, despite the general distress prevailing in Vienna, a considerable sum is devoted to biological research work.

The Flemish University Question

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

Anent your editorial "The Flemish University Question" in your issue of Dec. 29. I am sure you will allow me to make things a little clearer to your readers and also to correct a few mistakes. As an old subscriber I know that the Monitor always stands at the front for justice and for the oppressed against the oppressor.

These protests, however, do not come française, which is subsidited by the French Government and the sole aim of which in Belgium has always been to keep the Flemings, the majority, in subjection to the Walloons, the minority, or in other words to maintain the supremacy of French in Belgium. Your editorial further says that backed by the Roman Catholic church Government positions and intended to keep them.

Although the Flemings have gained much ground they are far from being on an equal footing with the Walloons, as today we stand before the fact that in the intermediate and higher institutions of learning the Flemish student has to get his lessons in French, his books are French; as an intellectual he must hear read and talk in a language. must hear, read and talk in a language not his own.

It is a happy phenomenon that the intelligent Flemings protest more and more against this injustice; that the women also begin to see that the mother tongue should not be inferior to the foreign one and that the Flemings want to reform this wonderful anachronism of a French university in a chronism of a French university in a

Dutch-speaking country.

There are four universities in Belgium; of these, two are private institu-tions, the free University of Brussels and the Roman Catholic University of Louvain; the two others are state uni-versities, one in Ghent and one in Liége. French is the medium in all of them A few years ago, as the Flemings began to get more and more insistent, the Government saw that something had Government saw that something had to be done, and proposed to create a new university in Antwerp with Dutch as the medium for teaching. This, however, the Flemings indignantly refused. They did not want a gift; they wanted equality and would not be satisfied until they had one of the state schools as their own and as the University of Ghent is located in their midst—Liége being in Walloonia—they insisted on Ghent.

Your editorial further states that the

Your editorial further states that the justice of this has not been denied by the Walloons. If this was the case, there would be peace in Belgium today, I was surprised, however, to see the Monitor advance as a reason for the protest against this charge the fact that the University of Ghent is an important link between Walloonia and Flanders, which amounts to the same thing. Furthermore there remains the University of Brussels and of Louvain, a link respectively for the liberals and the clericals of southern Belgium. Both of these, like Ghent; are centrally located in the Flemish part of Belgium and use French as medium for teaching. The trouble is that the Walloons do not want one link, but as anyone can see, they want all of them.

As for the protests, supposed to come from the French and the French-speaking Swiss, one fails to see what these people have to do with a fundamental question that concerns only the two racial components of modern Belgium.

Simons, chairman of the league's citizenship training committee. This school was the first to be held in the middle west in conjunction with a university. More than 100 Illinois women attended.

In speaking of the success of the school Mrs. Simons said:

It is hoped that these women will re-turn to their communities and build up citizenship education centers that will become a force in their communities in securing good government. I don't believe there is a single woman here who has come entirely for her own edifica-tion. They came for information and methods that can be utilized.

The program took up methods of teaching citizenship, primarily sons, demonstrations and getting the views of experts of various government problems. Emphasis was laid the problems of administration and the field of government from its local to its international aspects. In April a similar school running four and a half days is to be held at the University of Chicago.

Special from Monitor Bureau NEW YORK, Feb. 3-E. F. Raynolds of the New York Amateur Billiard Club, is today the amateur pocket-billiard champion of the United contest by a score of 125 to 121, in which victory was not certain until an exhibition of safety play. Shoe-maker was first to show, making a run of 29 in the second, third and fourth frames and leading at 36 to 4. But Raynolds tied the score at the end of the eighth frame, at 54 each. Not until the thirteenth frame was either able to shake off the other. Not until the thirteenth frame was either able to shake off the other. Then Shoemaker took 13 balls in two successive frames, by the cleverest sort of position play, in which he broke the balls by scoring on clever combination shots, and gained a lead of 108 to $2. But Raynolds took advantage of a miss by the former champage of the company of the first price $1000 on practically all models. The new Gardner line represents an increase of $70 on the open models and $20 on the closed. A miss gave Shoemaker a chance; but the closeness of the score proved too great a handicap for the former champion, and after compiling 5, he slipped up on an easy. shot for the side pocket, the ball hitting the point. Then Raynolds ran out the frame, and found himself at the start of the next within a point victory. He shot the cleanup ball into the corner pocket, and the match was over. The score by frames:

The Ruralist and His Problems

most universal movement within the farmer group. In many cases it is not co-operation at all. In other cases it partial co-operation of large or small groups, some closely knit, others associated in a loose organization. In many cases the "co-operative" is a closed corporation. In other cases it is scarcely more than a fellow feeling about common problems.

The fact is that the problem of the farmers is a whole group of problems, and immensely difficult problems. True many of the difficulties are due to misunderstanding, mistrust, misuse of terms, to the individualistic tendency of most farmers, to the too-frequent hostility of business interests to a movement of farmers that promises movement of tarmers that promises greater efficiency of production and distribution of food products, because it the tens to eliminate certain profits of tree. But the real difficulty is that the problem is so complex.

There is the task of finding an outlet for goods. Then there is the second consideration of securing a relation to the market that will result in a fair profit on the goods sold. A vital consideration is efficiency in marketing so that real service may be rendered at a minimum cost. And it is a problem of the producer that there be this service Milwaukee was outclasesd through- on its security to finance his marketout though the work of F. D. Moore, ing or storing. That is now the chief obstacle to successful organization of farmer groups and 1922 the winners were Julius Fleischagreement upon a business method of solving the problems of their common enterprise. That the farmer cannot go on much longer in this modern world of organization without developing some coherence in his basic industry is perfectly apparent. But certain fundamental processes of education must first be completed. The farmer, than any other group today, lacks social imagination, and a fellow feeling with his fellow men. There is a social value in the fullest sense in the operation that is growing and that must grow among farmers.

Before they have advanced very far in establishing organized working re-lations among their own group, farmers will have learned much that is of educational value about the relation between their situation and that of the labor unionists. They cannot avoid the conclusion that both farmer. and industrial worker are faced with ket their labor to advantage: to secure the just reward of honest labor. concrete product of his labor to sell. The industrialist bargains for the labor that goes into the product another will sell. But both are concerned that there be not too many profits exacted from the goods they have produced, that industrial relations be as direct and efficient as possible; that special privilege be evicted wherever it menaces the economics of production and distribution; in short that there be true democracy in industry. And as the farmer's individualistic tendency fuellows into the spirit of co-operation, he is going to overcome his affection for conservatism. Then no longer can he be counted on by the forces of reaction. For, if the farmer could see beneath the surface of his economic problem, he would see that it is to secure recognition of the rights of human labor, every-

The first game for the Miami Beach Polo Cup will probably be played on Tuesday next, Feb. 6. At that time the polo teams will have been formed and games will be played every day. Three games a week have been played up to the present, on Tuesdays, when Mackay passed to Duncan, who scored half a minute after the opening of the first period. another score.

The overtime period opened with both teams playing ragged hockey. Then, as the Victoria net was toppling over with half the Vancouver team pressing around it, the puck glanced into the goal from Boucher's stick. Victoria claimed that play should have stopped as soon as the net got out of place; but their claim was not allowed. Mackay, Skinner and Duncan played well for Vancouver, while Oatman and Halderson were Victoria's outstanding players. The summary: VANCOUVER VICTORIA

Bruno Walter in America to Conduct Symphony Concerts

BRUNO WALTER, conductor of the Munich Opera, arrived here this afternoon on the Manchuria, having come to direct concerts of the New York Symphony Orchestra, the Detroit Symphony Orchestra and the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. He said that he had lately given some programs in Vienna and that he had appeared in Hamburg just before taking ship for the United States. Talking with a representative of The Christian Science Monitor, he remarked that in Vienna he saw Wilhelm Gericke, formerly conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and found him happy over the fund that American conductors, on the initiative of Walter Damrosch, had got together for the benefit of himself and his family. He spoke of Max Fiedler, another former Roston Symphony contacts of the spoke of Max Fiedler, another former Roston Symphony contacts. family. He spoke of Max Fiedler, another former Boston Symphony conductor, as located at Essen, in charge of an orchestra.

Among those who met Mr. Walter at the pier was Paul Bender, the Met-ropolitan Opera bass. Mr. Walter referred to Mr. Bender as having once belonged to his musical family at the Munich Opera, and he named Mme. Ivogun, Mme. Onegin and Mr. Schützendorf, now singing in the United States, as also having been members of the Munich group. In the course of the customs examination, a valise containing orchestral scores was opened, and the interviewer asked if there were any new pieces of music amongst them.

"I'm here too short a time," said he, "to produce novelties. But a work I'm interested in is one of the Mozart symphonies in D, not the familiar one of three movements, but the less well known one of four. When performing it, I shall reduce the orchestra considerably. I hold that that should be done with the symphonies of Mozart's younger period, because they are so much like chamber music compositions."

As Mr. Walter and his friends moved toward the street, the interviewer expressed regret that visitors like him were so seldom asked to direct opera performances in the United States and deplored the common opinion that conducting in the concert hall was of more consequence than conducting in the opera house.

"Oh, yes!" he made answer.
"Opera is a sort of high school for the conductor. That's the prevailing idea, and I thing it rather correct. In opera you have all the problems, and you work them out one after another. Then you apply your understanding of them in concert."

Walter began his artistic career in childhood as a pianist, coming out in public at the same time as Josef Hofmann. His highest achievement in recent years has been, perhaps, his directing of the Mozart and Wagner festivals in Munich. He is visiting the United States for the first time, and his plans include three appearances in New York, a short call in Detroit and a four-weeks' stay in Minneapolis. He gives his first concert in Carnegie Hall on the afternoon of Feb. 15, pre-senting Beethoven's "Leonora" overture No. 2, the Mozart symhony in D and the Brahms symphony No. 1.

The first violin has ethereal passages suggestive of the dashing of the spray against the bea-con, the far outflinging of the beams of light, the swooping flight of the sea birds and their cries. Then the rage of the storm is lulled, with the gentlest of ripples in place of the crested billows. The following move-ment is "Les Dunes" and the strings are muted for a Debussy-like reverie evocative of lone reaches of sands inviting to somnolence or meditation. In last place is "La Racleuse." It was a tribute to the quality of the audience that a work of such intimate, profound and work of such intimate, profound and solemn character should have made the supreme impression of the after-noon. Yet the familiar and beloved op. 59, no. 3, of Beethoven made an almost equal impression. In the Andante movement, particularly skillful was the pizzicato of the cellist, Mr. Warwick-Evans. One prefers not to individualize, when the quartet ideal is so well realized, for the prime satisfaction to the listener is the consonance of the entity, not the voices severally considered. But the violaplaying of H. Waldo Warner had a quality comparable with that of the performance of Mr. Kreiner of the Letz Quartet, for nimbleness of execu-

PARIS, Jan. 19 (Special Correspondence) — M. Rhené-Baton has twice in succession given Paris the twice in succession given Paris the opportunity of hearing foreign conpoperations.

The performance of "The Three Sisters" by the Moscow Art Theatre Company is a little finer, a little more delicate, and much more su elusive than was their perfo "The Cherry Orchard," by the same author, therefore "The Three Sisters" will very likely not make even as broad an appeal to the general public as did the other Tchekhoff play. There are doubtless good reasons why this piece is being acted instead of a work by some other author, chosen from the 70 or 80 plays in the repertoire of this excellent company. Possibly Constantin Stanislavsy desired to give to America the very best his company is able to do, without regard to popular appeal. Certain it is that the performance of "The Three Siswould seem to be the last word in the employment of the most modern acting technique to a play of the modern school. Here is a perfect understanding established between playwright, producer, and player. It is doubtful if New York has ever before seen a stage performance quite so exquisite in art values.

The play is of such delicate texture, so close to nature itself, that unless played by a company each member of which is a virtuoso—as in the present case—there is practically nothing there. Three sisters greatly desire to go to Moscow. They are unable to do so. That about sums up what plot there is. The natural question that arises is, "Why do they not go to Moscow?" As well ask why Hamlet does not avenge the murder of his father in Scene 1, Act II, in the play of "Hamlet," after having said the lines: "O! cursed spite! That ever I was born to set it right!"

In "The Three Sisters" Tchekhoff shows us aspiration held in bondage.

Special from Monitor Bureau

CHICAGO, Feb. 3-For another week grain prices on the Chicago Board of Trade defied "bearish" developments. Chicago market. Corn is regarded not so much a world commodity as wheat. Being consumed largely in the United States, corn is believed on that account to be worth more than wheat, relatively. American surplus wheat must find a market through European countries that are at present unable to buy what they need.

Exports, however, still are a considerable factor in the corn market and the revival of foreign demand noted during the week had its effect. Reappearance of foreign bidding led locals to discredit the persistent reports that there are large accumula-tions of corn at eastern terminals. Gulf ports drew heavily on Chicago territory. Unfavorable reports from the Argentine on the corn crop fol-

MARKET OPINIONS

J. S. Bache & Co., New York—A two-point average rise in industrials since the lows of Thursday is the largest two-day advance since the middle of January. If this is the genuine beginning of a new advance, we see no hurry about taking profits, because swings of this character usually go along with only minor interruptions for some time, until the technical position becomes impaired. impaired.

Hornblower & Weeks, Boston: If the upward movement is to be resumed, it should be clearly indicated in a very few days. Therefore, it is worth while to await positive evidence of this kind with respect to the main body of stocks and avoid buying them on top of these ultimate rallies until we find whether the rally is the starting point of a new forward movement.

Trading in wheat grew narrower during the week. Receipts are still running high and visible supply is said to be larger than for a similar period a year ago.

Shippers, were slow moving grain out at export points and there was some decrease in foreign demand. Flour mills in the west slowed down and foreign statistics were "bearish." In the face of all this, wheat not only held its position, but advanced.

Hayden, Stone & Co., Boston: While we do not believe in placing too much emphasis on seasonal fluctuations, it is true that the next month is very apt to be an indecisive period. NTERWOVEN with the romance of the automotive industry is the rise of one of its greatest captains, Charles W. Nash, president of the Nash Motors Company of Kenosha and Milwaukee, Wis. At 13, with the little sum he had saved, he began his first business enterprise by buying 10 sheep These he put out to graze. In three years he was the owner of 20 sheep. "That was my start," he said, "for since then I have never been wholly

When 21 he became manager of a large farm near Flint, Mich. Here he learned the second fundamental lesson, that of working with and directing men of all types. After seven years of service, Mr. Nash left the farm, moved to Flint, and obtained work as a trimmer in the Flint Road Cart

His progress from that time on was more rapid, for he pushed up from employee to manager, from organizer to owner. His exceptional ability as a manager of men was quickly observed by J. D. Dort, president of the cart company, and he was made superintendent of the plant with its 150 workers. With the growth of the firm into an establishment of eight plants, named the Durant-Dort Carriage Company, Mr. Nash, assuming responsibility of all details, became vice-president and general superintendent. When in 1910 the Buick Motor Company needed rejuvenation, Mr. Nash was called in. Under his constructive work, as president and manager, the concern within two years was placed on a sound foundation. In 1912 he was given one of the biggest positions in the automotive industry when he was made president of the General Motors Company, a huge holding corporation comprising a number of automobile, truck and motor accessory concerns. He continued in this position until 1916, when, because of differences over policy, he resigned.

Two months after his resignation he bought the Thomas B. Jeffery Company, a concern which had grown from the bicycle days into a sound conservative producer of motor cars and trucks. Mr. Nash then began his greatest venture, that of developing the Nash Motors Company which become one of the largest automobile manufacturing plants in the country.

In addition to the presidency of these great works, Mr. Nash became the head of the Lafayette Motor Company. He is also a director in sev-eral banks and a number of other corporations.

President N. B. H. Parker says to the stockholders:

During the first three-quarters of 1922 we failed to write a sufficient volume of merchandise business to make normal earnings possible. We. in common with other filing equipcorrespondingly late to realize on improved business conditions.

The last quarter of the year has shown satisfactory earnings, and the present volume of our bookings equals the quota set for our offices.

While we have paid the greater par f the common stock dividends from accumulated and undistributed surplus, we have paid the regular preferred stock dividends from current earnings.

BETHLEHEM STEEL HAS EMPLOYEES' WELFARE PROGRAM

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 3-The Bethlehem Steel Company will spend $2,-500,000 in a home building and welfare program for the employees of its Lackawanna plant, according to announcement by Timothy Burns, general manager.

Five hundred or more modern homes will be built by the company, at a cost of $2,000,000. These will be sold to company workmen, although the entire financing will be undertaken by the corporation. A welfare hall costing $500,000 will be built within the

Mr. Burns said plans have been drawn for enlargements and improve-ments of the Lackawanna plant which call for an expenditure of $22,000,000.

CUSTOMS RULINGS

NEW YORK, Feb. 3 (Special)—The Board of United States General Appraisers has just handed down another important ruling under the Tariff Act of 1922 covering the right of an importer to collect duty refund in cases where merchandise has been destroyed by fire within the port of entry and before landing. Sustaining a petition of the N. Abramovitz Company, Inc., the customs board points out that whereas, heretofore, the power to grant such relief rested in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, the general appraisers, under authority granted in section 563 of the Administrative Provisions of the Tariff Act of 1922, now have jurisdiction in cases of this kind. An important precedent is therefore established and the way opened to importers at the various ports of entry to obtain duty refunds on merchandise destroyed before landing without the slow process of appeal to the Treasury officials in Washington. Instead of one official acting in cases of this character, the customs board, consisting of nine federal judges, will render decisions. the customs board, consisting of nine federal judges, will render decisions. The merchandise, the subject of this test case, was entirely destroyed by accidental fire in the hold of the ship while in port. The board finds that this was proved beyond dispute and, therefore, refund of the entire amount

CHILDS CO. STOCK SOARS ON RUMORS OF MELON CUTTING

NEW YORK, Feb. 3-Childs Company common the last few days rose 25 points to 151-155, accompanied by rumors of a stock dividend or inment manufacturers, are always late crease in the cash rate, now $8 annually. Neither is contemplated. nually. Neither is contemplated. However, earnings of $30.29 a share on the common in 1922 and a profit on the common in 1922 and a profit and loss surplus of $2,583,894 would amply justify a "melon" to stockholders, whenever directors see fit.

In the last three ways of the last three ways.

In the last three years Childs has earned $102.74 a share for the $4,000,-000 common after 7 per cent dividends on the $4,613,300 preferred. Dividends which have been closed down for several stock in this time and $80.24 a share plowed in. Dividends on the com-mon were increased in 1920 first to a $6 basis and then to an $8 basis. There were none paid from Dec. 10, 1914, to March 10, 1916.

The margin of profit the last three years has been diminishing. Earnings were only $1,534,448 in 1922, compared with $1,540,799 in 1921 and $1,971,829 in 1920, despite an increase in the number of restaurants. There are now 98 restaurants, of which two were opened recently. The steady increase restaurants has been financed mostly from earnings. The number has doubled since 1906. Gross business in 1922 was $21,000.000.

TORONTO ROAD VALUATION TORONTO. Feb. 3—The board of arbitrators fixed $11,188,500 as the price for the city of Toronto to pay for the properties of the Toronto Railway Company system. The city offered $4,000,000 and the company fixed the valuation at $22,000,000 $22,000,000

These branches of industry, although still operating at small part of capacity, are reported by W. S. Tower, Commercial Attaché, to the United States Department of Commerce, as being about to restart plants which have remained idle since Heavy shipments of merchandise of all kinds have been arriving in Peru on recent boats, undoubtedly in anticipation of the new tariff. Iron, steel, and wire products are conspicuous.

One boat from New York brought 485,570 kilos of iron and steel, and 485,570 kilos of iron and steel, and 138,000 kilos of wire, which are rather large shipments for Peru. All the large firms seem to be stocking up on such heavy merchandise, and there should be enough to supply the needs of the country for quite a while to come says W. E. Dunn. Acting to come, says W. #### SECURITY MARKET RESPONDS TO SOME BULLISH FACTORS

Disturbing Events in Europe Offset by Constructive Announcements

NEW YORK, Feb. 3 (Special)-Dedirect influence upon the stock market certainly have not been lacking. First of all there were the situations in the Conference, about which no one could foresee and forecast the outcome, or what might happen a short time

Generally speaking, both situations could not help being distinctly dis-turbing. Both French and German currencies experienced further sharp week. Even sterling yielded. Yesterday the leading currencies, including marks, rallied sharply.

Although the developments from day to day between the French and Germans in the Ruhr Valley were vatched with keen interest, particularly in international banking circles, as possibly indicative of something really decisive soon with respect to the whole situation, and although the dispatches from Lausanne on Thursbreak at the Near East Conference was barely averted the day before, chief importance was attached to the acceptance by the British Cabinet of the American suggestions for funding Great Britain's war debt to the United

Debt Settlement Aids Market

The response in our stock market was measured by only a moderate adwas measured by only a moderate advance. It might be more accurate to say that this was the tangible and visible effect. As the tone of the market for stocks prior to the coming of the news was unsettled, it is possible that without the news, there might have been a rather sharp reaction that day or the next. The market appeared to be feeling the strain caused by the strain caused the increasingly compared to be feeling the strain caused the increasingly compared to be feeling the strain caused the strain cause by anxiety over the increasingly comolicated European situation and the unstable technical position in indusbeen pretty largely confined for some

Probably the most perceptible influence of the British war debt announcement in Europe and this counto the foreign exchange and security expressed the opinion that it would be as it would show that Great Britain and the United States were together, and that probably in due time they could be depended upon to assist in the adjustment of the great world some for some time, and for which no solution has been found as yet.

Awaits Approval of Congress

The whole question of a plan for funding the British war debt to the United States will soon be in the of the American Congress. Although there have been some misgivings on the part of Secretary Mellon and other prominent Adminstration officials as to what that body will do with the matter, it is generally with a minimum of delay. President and Near East situations, it is by no means pleasant to think of the serious possibilities in each instance. While possibilities in each instant the French it has been predicted that the French invasion would resolve itself into a solve invasion would resolve itself into a solve invasion with the Germans, it tug of war with the Germans, it is solve in a solve invasion in the solve invasion would resolve itself into a solve it undertaking can be prolonged without a big rupture of some kind. Another complication was added to the Near East situation by the suggested pos-sibility of a new political alignment in Europe, if the negotiations between the Allies and the Turks should break Increase in Government Revenues

Railroad Earnings Improve

Turning to the United States, much pleasanter reading and brighter prosfrom the shopmen's and coal strikes, nues, bank clearings and imports are the returns for the final month of reported. Interest rates have declined. 1922 and for the full period were surprisingly favorable.

The natural result was a fairly active speculation in railroad stocks. The fact that the advances, even in the most active issues, were not more pronounced, appear to demonstrate, as did the absence of a big response to the British war debt news, that the big situations in Europe do not jus-tify an extensive upward movement in stocks just now.

The announcement by President Harding that the indicated deficit of the Government had been reduced from $698,000,000 at the beginning of the first fiscal year to $92,500,000, and that there was a fair chance of re-porting no deficit whatever, could not fail to be encouraging.

The fact that the United States

Steel Corporation failed by nearly $11,000,000 to earn the full common dividend in 1922, was regarded as disappointing in speculative circles, and for a day or so caused a moderate selling movement.

Other Bullish Factors

The announcement of the modified Reading segregation plan was without special effect. It did not differ greatly from the original plan. The Lehigh Valley segregation plan is expected next Monday.

Other factors of a bullish nature on particular sections of the market was the increase in sugar prices which brought strong buying into the sugar stocks; the announcement by Judge Gary of the Steel Corporation fore-casting higher prices for steel prodcasting higher prices for steel prod-ucts, and the passing of the Lenroot-Anderson credits bill by the Senate, which provides for a maximum credit of $1,320,000,000 for agricultural loans.

The stock market yesterday responded to rumors in private cables of negotiations already well under way for a settlement between France and Germany.

and Imports

A distinctly optimistic tone in Cuba is reflected in a cable to the Departpects were furnished by the many statements of railroad earnings for December and the full year 1922 that were made public. Although all the railroads of the United States suffered public bank clearings and imports are nues, bank clearings and imports are

> The sugar situation is encouraging. Another 4,000,000-ton crop is estimated, with prices (c. and f.) above 3 cents, and practically no carry-over from last year's crop. Opinion in Cuba is that sugar prices are to rise perceptibly as the grinding season draws to a close.

Colder weather is ripening the cane and sugar content is improving. Cane fires have been few, and up to the present no serious Labor difficulties have occurred, though some mills have felt Labor shortage, and the old "promedio" question is being reconsidered for adjustment.

Banking liquidation proceeds as rapidly as the market will absorb the securities held as collateral. Of the 18 banks which came under the juris-diction of the liquidation commission, three have resumed business, three have been liquidated, and three are expected to be liquidated within a few weeks. The National Commission or Banking Legislation has just published its report on banking reforms, including a proposed reserve bank. Improvements in paper and auto-mobile sales are reported, as are de-building activity is also indicated. W. R. BULL & CO.

Pittsburgh. Pa.

Huntington T. Morse, director for Europe of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, says increased westbound cargo now carried by United States Shipping Board vessels gives practical evidence of the increasing prestge of the American merchant marine. He sees European shipping conditions showing a slight improvement, although prominent London shipping men believe the improvement wil not be marked until a year from now.

Preliminary figures compiled by the

a year from now.

Preliminary figures compiled by the savings bank division of the American Bankers' Association show that 28,957,-526 depositors had $18,087,493,000 deposited June 30 last, compared with $16,618,695,000 in 26,637,831 accounts a year previous, a gain of $1,468,798,000 and 2,314,695 accounts. School savings deposits during the last school year were $5,500,000 and number of pupils participating 1,271,000, a growth of 40 per cent in deposits and 50 per cent in the number of pupils over the previous year.

weekly review of the domestic business situation, which continues:

"Spring trade with jobbers at the latter days of January, says the John V. Farwell Company. Collections are a little better, and industry has kept up the fast pace previously noted.

"Relatively most activity is noted in Percales, bedspreads and blankets." and southern centers. Retail trade has, relatively speaking, tended to lag, which is only natural at this season, but still exceeds a year ago, and reports from the larger markets are quite unanimous that January showed a big surge forward in job-bing and wholesale buying as com-pared with January a year ago, gains 25 to 50 per cent being instanced."

Gabrilowitsch and Sokoloff Discuss the Art of Orchestral Conducting

By WINTHROP P. TRYON

New York, Jan. 29 SSIP GABRILOWITSCH, conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, and Nikolai Sokoloff, conductor of the Cleveland Or-chestra, whom I had the pleasure of meeting here lately, took up such differing lines of discussion as to satisfy me that I can think of more than one sort of question to ask people. At the same time, each of them took such a special line as to cause me to wonder whether I do not sometimes call on artists with mind made up as to what their likes and dislikes are, and whether I do not govern my pursuit of information accordingly. news writer were to visit me, I should not, I am sure, want him to presume to know all about my predilections and aversions and to interview me on that basis; .for I believe that afterward I should feel I had been imposed upon. But whatever I may have done in the case of Mr. Gabrilowitsch and Mr. Sokoloff, and whatever I might wish to have done were I in their situation, the fact is that the musician from De-troit talked on the technical side of conducting and the one from Cleve-land on the human side.

Conducting With the Eye

"A conductor," said Mr. Gabrilo-witsch, "directs his players not so much by the baton as by his eye. Give me the player who watches me constantly, even while he reads his music. He may not be the best of performers, but he will do better than the man who is a master of his instrument but keeps his gaze fixed on his notes every minute. The properly schooled player when he has a passage of rest, will count his bars, and just before it is time for him to enter he will look up. Doing so, he will come in right, he will avoid any chance of spoiling things, and he will help produce a fine ensemble.

"I do not mean to say that the stick is unimportant. The conductor finds it suitable, especially for indicating degrees of intensity of sound. To mention other points, he can hold it in relaxed fashion or he can hold it firmly; he can be slow with it or quick; and in every case the men instantly respond. And then there is the left hand, every motion of which should have a meaning of its own. Often you see the conductor's left hand moving in mere imitation of his right, when it serves no useful pur-

"The technique of conducting is complicated and has not yet been developed in all possible directions; nor have rules been formulated to cover present developments in detail. I suppose everybody admits that Nikisch was the greatest technician we have had, and grants him the same position historically in regard to conducting that we grant to Liszt in regard to plano playing. And yet even Nikisch did not bring out all the potentialities.

One of the great things he did was to recognize that conducting technique could be taught, going so far as to institute a class in the subject at contralto, as accompanist in her recital and to attend to other affairs.

Mr. Sokoloff talked with me a few days later, when he was here with the Cleveland Orchestra, giving me an appointment in the green room of Carnegie Hall. But a few minutes were available for the interview, which I fancy was more familiar than formal. For we must needs get on the subject of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in which he used to play the violin, and of Charles Martin Loeffier, the composer, with whom he used to study. That I was face to face with an American-reared conductor I could scarcely believe, and ductor I could scarcely believe, and I demanded proof. Although he fur-nished abundant evidence in the matter, telling me among other things of his having for a while attended Yale University, I became convinced only when I heard him use a simile, showing a resemblance between symphony concerts and New England customs, in the following words:

"Too much of our orchestral music goes according to routine, like our having baked beans on the menu on

Programs

Mr. Sokoloff declared that a reiterated round of programs was as bad for audiences as for performers. He indicated that perhaps cut-and-dried methods were an inheritance from the régime of certain conductors from Europe, who, while accepting the honor of directing American orchestras, had cared little for the American people and had entertained small faith in their musical appreciation. And he pointed out that just now the United States has an advantage over much of Europe in being able properly to support orchestras for rehearsal. Calling to mind cities where organizations are thus maintained, he noted Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago Cleveland, Detroit, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Los Angeles, and San

Speaking of the kind of men he pre-fers to engage for the Cleveland Or-chestra, he said: "Let me have young men with talent, rather than men who have a high reputation and who are impressed with the importance of it. Let me choose my young men of talent and I will get a finished quality of playing within a reasonable time. The notion is an old-fashioned one that nen who have never played together cannot by a fair amount of practice make a good orchestra."

Mr. Sokoloff referred to the question, of young people's concerts with enthusiasm, and he spoke of the work the Cleveland Orchestra has done for school children and high school pupils in the past five years as fruitful preparation of audiences for the future.

devotion." But as the new religion spread over Europe there were many attempts to pour old wine into the new bottles, and age-green practices found their way into the ceremonies of the new church. To meet a popular demand for dramatic expression—resolutely resisted by the earlier Christians—the church itself went into theatrical management and produced its own plays. In Italy, France, and Spain, where the traditions of the old Roman theatrical representations still lingered, miracle and mystery-or more properly ministry, plays, quickly became the favorite entertainments of the congregawith our predecessors. Taking Biblical subjects such as "The Good Samaritan," "Job and his Friends," and "The Prodigal Son," he arranged these plays, or "Azioni Sacre"—which had a musical setting—into two parts. A sermon was delivered after the first part; but the curiosity of the congregation was so titillated "that there was no danger, during the sermon, that any of the hearers would retire before they had heard the sec-ond." The "Azioni Sacre" was perond." The "Azioni Sacre" was per-formed in a hall or "oratory" adjoining the church—hence the word "oratorio." They included dancers and a ballet.

We are told that the performances lasted several days, and the casts, like those of modern super-films, required hundreds of actors. "Jongleurs, historions, and all sorts of vagabonds took a lively part in these plays; and thus the sacred elements were not seldom submerged by profane satires, comic scenes, and gross buffoonery." The one indispensable character was that of the devil who seems to have one. valted roof and great organ soaring up behind an improvised stage gave just the right atmosphere to the play. Much would have been lost in the ordinary theater, with its picture-frame proscenium. The producer had evidently studied the stage directions left by Emilio Del Cavaliere, the author of the first oratorio (1600.) "The chorus are to have a place allotted them on the stage, part sitting and part standing, in sight of the principal characters; and when they sing, they are to rise and be in motion, with proper gestures." The smallness of the stage at Westminster made it necessary for part of the costumed chorus to sit in the orchestra, and from this necessity sprang an artistic virtue. The noman's land between stage and orchestra, always a bugbear to the producer without an apron stage, disappeared as the chorus stood up to sing and this helped the audience to feel that they were not the "outsiders" of the conventional theater.

Music Admirable

Music Admirable

Mr. Boughton's music is admirable. He has caught very skillfully the naïve sincerity of his libretto—which, by the way, is infinitely superior to that of "The Immortal Hour," with its purely pagan Celtic mythology. His score has the freshness and beauty that comes with simple direct musical statement, and he has made a nappy use of old carols. With perhaps the exception of parts of act II in the "Herod" scenes, no music could be more characteristically English. And Mr. Boughton knows how to write for the theater.

The composer is once more very fortunate with his leading woman. Miss Dorothy Silk as Mary sang and acted with a calm grave beauty and tenderness that lingered in one's memory. A more experienced con-ductor than Frederick C. Haggis might have avoided the excessive use of rallentando and secured more nuance, but his work was whole-hearted in its enthusiasm. The stage setting, costumes and lighting of Christina Walshe showed real imaginative vision. An enterprising the-atrical manager, if there is such a person, should engage her services at once. The Streatham Philharmonic Society, Frederick Woodhouse, the producer, and all who were concerned in a felicitous commixture of professional and amateur art deserve the gratitude of everyone who loves

The Russian Opera

The opera is probably the most imposing and distinctive feature of Russia's musical life at the present time. In Moscow one becomes conscious of a definitely Russian conception of the function of opera, quite different from the Italian conception of the opera as built up around a few brilliant arias and the German conception of the music drama, as embodied in the works of Wagner. The typically Russian opera is designed to attract the eye fully as much as the ear. This was brought out very clearly in the pro-duction of "Aida," which was regarded as one of the most important events of the present operatic season in Moscow. The scenic side of the performance was so skillfully and elaborately designed that it easily shared the audience's attention with the singing and the music. Not only were the old Egyptian backgrounds faithfully and brilliantly presented; the acting was shaped to fit in perfectly with these backgrounds. The posturing both of the chief actors and of the ensemble was calculated to suggest the stiff two-dimensional figures of the Egyptian and Babylonian wall paintings. The pantomimic illusion in this respect was really remarkable and contributed in no small measure to the success of Jordan Hall, Tues. Eve., Feb. 6, at 8:15 the performance and the enthusiasm of the audience.

The most popular of the native Russian operas, "Sadko," "Tsar Saltan" and "Prince Igor," are really gorgeous pageants, in which color and

The Leaderless Orchestra One very interesting and very successful musical experiment in Moscow is the leaderless orchestra, which is the leaderless orchestra, which gives concerts regularly in the large hall of the Conservatory. The moving spirit in this undertaking is the concertmaster, Mr. Zeitlin, who has worked so energetically and untiringly worked so energetically and untiringly and the experiment that for the success of the experiment that the saying has grown up: "The leaderless orchestra plays so well because it has such an excellent leader." No trace of leadership can be seen, however, when the orchestra comes to render its programs. The conductor's stand is empty and neither Mr. Zeitlin nor any other member of the orchestra gives any signal for the beginning and ending of the compositions. The faith in the possibilities of co-operative musicianship embodied in this orchestra has been justified by the results,

Soon Hans Egede established trade connections with the mother country. As a matter of fact, it was the possibility of gaining profit from the undertaking that had led certain wealthy clissens of Bergen to support Egede the Gospel, and a Pardoner who was a worthy comrade to Chaucer's own. There were courtiers too and a king. (At this point Langland takes occasion to read a lesson to the young and reckless Richard II.) Barons, burshone through any veil of form. Moreover the very fact that he chose the new verse is a proof of his forwardlooking vision; whereas Langland's adherence to the old assures us that he was writing with no thought of pos-terity, but for the humble folk of his

Having granted, then, that in literary form, "Piers" cannot be compared with the liquid diction of Chaucer's verse, that it is rugged, crude, even uncouth in expression, incoherent in thought, showing a writer who cannot always control his material, but is too often mastered by it-what shall we say of this medieval dreamer?

First that in this very weakness lay his power-that the use of the oldfashioned versification which represented to his hearers the old England that they knew and cherished, be-speaks an overwhelming sincerity and earnestness of purpose. The attacks on the clergy were bludgeon strokes— very different from the delicate persiflage of Chaucer. Langland felt their short-comings too deeply to treat of them humorously, and he was writing not for the court—as Chaucer was—but for uneducated folk on whom subtle irony would have been wasted.

In the form of a dream vision—or rather a series of intermittent visions (the regular medieval machinery) the regular medieval machinery) he pictures the pilgrims seeking the "Tower of Truth." Scholars tell us that the poem is the work of at least three different hands—but this need concern us little, for however many they be, all have been animated with the purpose of the original writer. Yet even the average lay reader can detect a more ecclesiastical trend in the latter part of the poem, and a corre-sponding falling off of its art.

Piers-or Peter the Plowman-is the only one who can direct the pilgrims on their way, and his directions are so bewildering that they beg him to escort them. This he consents to do, but only on condition that he first finish plowing his field, and that the pilgrims, high and low, join him in this task. But humanly enough they protest; they have come for no humdrum, uninspired work like this. A vivid scene follows which convinces us that labor troubles were as rife in the Middle Ages as they are today. The pilgrims strike and will not work until hard experiences subdue their insubordination. The design of the author is so evident, so strikingly portrayed that one feels that the original poem ended here. Truth is at-tained not by going on distant pil-grimages, but by "doing the duty that lies nearest" (even as Carlyle has

Aside from the obvious sincerity of the poem, Langland is a master of graphic description and trenchant characterization. In the opening scene, on the Malvern Hills of a May morning, the dreamer begins:

gesses, bakers and butchers, webbers and it was only later that this was and weavers of linen, tailors and found to be of no value whatsoever. The historic data about Greenland show how on a certain day in October, 1708, Hans Egede, while wandering among the majestic surroundings of his native city, came to think of what he had once read about the Northmen in Greenland; how they had settled down and established colonies, includ-ing churches and convents. He wondered what was their fate in that far-off country. His brother-in-law was a seaman who had sailed along the Greenland coast, but the information that he could supply was decidedly meagre. The best that Egede could learn was that the "wild" men of the don daily making pen and ink drawregion were adverse to intercourse with outsiders. Little daunted, Hans Egede was more than ever anxious to get into touch with those whom he considered his kinsmen in Greenland. What he finally accomplished among the Eskimos is a story as replete with ro-mance as the task was one to test the very fibre of the man.

The Greenland Exhibition in Copenhagen commemorating the discovery or rather settlement, of the country by Hans Egede, showed how much richer that section is in animal life than was generally known. There was a remarkable collection of musk oxen, polar bears, snow hares, besides innumerable specimens of the deep. In addition there was a wonderful array of butterflies, insects and birds, and as for the flora, there is reason to believe that the forerunner of Hans Egede, Eric the Red, chose the name of Greenland for the land he discovered because of the vegetation that he encountered along the coast. This was as far back as the year 981. Nine-teen years after Eric the Red, Leif Ericsson, sailing down along the mainland, landing again and again, gave the names to Helluland, Markland, Vinland—in other words, Leif Erics-son's voyage was the beginning of Viking discovery of the new world, nearly five hundred years be-fore Columbus sighted San Salvador.

Through the importunity of a kind friend who recognized in his untaught drawings a latent talent he was given the opportunity to study in London. Not the well-groomed, slick beauties of the racing stable, but the heavy plodding four-footed beast of burden that he knew in the land of his boyhood days. His technique is sketchy but beneath the sketchiness is the knowledge of drawing and of form and color.

As in the accompanying illustration, "Short Harvest," he imparts the spirit of the scene. Nothing in it is cheap or faked. Only the bare essentials sufficient to tell his story are put on the plate. For the minute details one's own imagination must be invoked. The quality of sincerity and of truthfulness is evident in all that is an artist who knows and loves his subject, and who all the time through the medium of his art is silently urgand beauty of what he has to say.

The first and second of the "Conversations" arranged for Emerson by Fields are duly described in the journal. "ALL roads lead to Rome," the ancients used to say. Today all the diplomatic strings run to the Rhine or to oil wells. As forecast in these columns, the Turks maintain their adamant attitude, because they count on a break in the solidarity of the Allies. Since the British Government decided not to support the French reparation policy on the Rhine, Premier Poincaré is plainly preparing, step by step, to dissociate himself from Lord Curzon in regard to the Near East. When the British Secretary of Foreign Affairs rushed to Paris after the fall of Smyrna to ask French aid in staving off a Turkish military advance on the Straits, ex-Deputy Henri Franklin-Bouillon, who had negotiated the Angora Treaty between France and the Turks, was sent to intercede with Mustapha Kemal Pasha in favor of peace. War was then averted, but M. Franklin-Bouillon, who, in his return to Toulon on board of the fast cruiser Metz, had prided himself as one of the world's notable servants of peace, was disappointed in his ambition to be the leading French delegate to the Lausanne Conference. That place, however, fell to M. Barrère, French Ambassador at Rome.

Since the break-up of the premiers' conference at Paris over reparations, M. Barrère himself has withdrawn. While he was at Lausanne the allied front toward the Turks was fairly intact. His departure coincides with the change in French policy toward co-operation in the Near East with Great Britain. Now while the British delegates threaten to leave at once unless the Turks give in, the French Premier sends a message to Angora that the French will stay and continue the talk. Today, M. Bompard, the former French Ambassador to Turkey, is the chief spokesman for France. Will

Franklin-Bouillon be sent tomorrow?

While the Allies worked together, the Turks relied temporarily on Russian support. But when challenged they gave in on the Straits question, despite Russian aid. But the Russians are not in the market for oil concessions, having petroleum fields of their own to sell. While staying armed and ready for all eventualities, the Turks are evidently waiting for the highest bid from Western capitalists. A short while ago Ferid Bey visited Paris while Mouktar Bey, a specialist in railroads and petroleum developments, went to London for private negotiations. The British have announced that they rejected the offer of the right to exploit the Mosul oil resources, made conditional on a return to Turkey of the sovereignty of the province. What answer Ferid Bey brought back has not been published.

Shortly before that, according to the Journal de Genève, the Turkish Nationalist Assembly had rejected offers from an American syndicate for the exploitation of railroads and oil fields in eastern Anatolia, adjacent to Mosul. It would be interesting to know what offers the Turks have received from American capitalists in regard to Mosul itself. That the United States Government intends to make a separate treaty with the Turks, should the Lausanne Conference break up, has been repeatedly announced. Jules Cambon, former French Ambassador to both Washington and Berlin, recently abandoned his diplomatic career to head a Franco-American oil company. That he still enjoys excellent connections in French official circles may be taken for granted.

Thus, while this bidding for the recently discovered resources under the old battle fields of the Assyrians and Chaldeans goes on, the question of peace and war hangs once more in the balance.

IT MAY be conceded in advance that Roy A. Haynes, Federal Prohibition Commissioner for the United States,

Mr. Haynes
Surveys
Dry
Sentiment

has always been hopeful that there would eventually be practically complete enforcement of the law forbidding the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, as provided by the Eighteenth Amendment. Even he admits extreme optimism. But it can hardly be contended that because of this official position, he is a prejudiced witness. Justice compels the concession that he, with all the facts before him, is able to qualify as a competent witness whose testimony is conclusive.

Thus weight must be given to his statement, issued after his return from an investigation of conditions in the Pacific coast and southwestern states, that he has found everywhere in those sections an overwhelming public sentiment in favor of the enforcement of the prohibitory law. It will be insisted, no doubt, that the investigator met and conferred only with those whose sympathies and support he had reason to rely upon. It may be admitted that he did not attempt to survey public sentiment by interviewing the violators of the law. He did, however, confer with business men, legislators, judges of the courts, enforcement officials, professional men, and representatives of the best thought everywhere. He found an almost unanimous sentiment in support of law enforcement.

As a matter of fact, it is unimportant to survey or consider the sentiment opposed to law enforcement, whatever the enactment may be, when there is arrayed on the side of the law and in sympathy with its reasonable intent, the social and political forces which are found by Mr. Haynes to be allied in a common cause. No destructive campaign, though representative of all the forces of evil in a nation, can prevail against the mobilized strength of a right-thinking majority of the forward-looking men and women of that nation.

The need now is for the mobilization of all those forces which Mr. Haynes finds are in sympathy with the law. Nothing can prevail against this solidified sentiment, which should find its expression in more stringent legislation in the states and in a fuller co-operation by the courts and their enforcement officers and agents. It is an incontrovertible fact that any law is more generally enforced wherever the opportunity is given for the expression, through the courts and otherwise, of the will of the people, defined as public sentiment.

Two New York weekly papers, of extended circulation, have undertaken the difficult task of collating

American

American sentiment as to the justice and the expediency of the French occupation of the Ruhr district. While the results of this enterprise of The Outlook and of The Literary Digest are interesting, they will still leave the public mind in somewhat of its present unsettled condition. For it appears that while there is a very general denial of the expediency of the French action, public opinion is sharply definite as to its justice.

The Outlook, in its classification of the facts obtained, seems to show that opinion in what may be called the tidewater states, both Atlantic and Pacific, largely favors France on the ground both of justice and expediency, while in the interior the condemnation of the French action is quite general. The editor of The Outlook addressed both public men and newspapers. He found out what is too often the case that the public men, as a rule, were inclined to evade all definite opinion. German political influence is still strong in the United States, and there is no French vote. Yet a majority of the opinions gathered by The Outlook, including both public men and newspapers, supports the action of France.

The Literary Digest quotes, more or less at length, eight prominent newspapers, representing all sections of the United States, warmly applauding the French action. Opposed to this action it notes all the Hearst newspapers, which are carrying Mr. Lloyd George's vigorous attacks upon the French policy. It finds among public men Gen. Charles G. Dawes, Josephus Daniels, Thomas A. Edison, Dr. Henry Van Dyke, and the presidents of the universities of Chicago and California approving the French action; while Senators Borah, Caraway, John Sharp Williams, Weller of Maryland, and President Faunce of Brown University are against it. It is interesting to note that those two bosom friends, William Allen White, editor of the Emporia (Kan.) Gazette, and Henry J. Allen, ex-Governor of Kansas, sharply differ in opin-ion on this issue, Mr. Allen saying: "I think it is a good thing to remember with gratitude the brave manner in which France fought for the cause of civilization, which was threatened in the conflict." While Editor White says of Kansas opinion concerning France: "If she needed our help, leadership of the community which made war sentiment in 1917 would be rather definitely against war to help France today."

Perhaps the best thing that can be said of such efforts as this to collate and interpret public sentiment is that they are at best superficial and incomplete. Beyond doubt there is widespread divergence of opinion in the United States as to the wisdom of the French action, and dissension, although not so general, as to its justice. Perhaps the only intelligent way to consider the subject is to hold judgment somewhat in abeyance until the results of the occupation have become manifest. The Philadelphia Ledger sums up the situation in a paragraph when it says:

If the Ruhr occupation produces enough to satisfy the French people, if it works to their satisfaction and does not lead to a central European disturbance, well and good. If it fails, if it threatens to defeat the whole scheme of reparations and throw Europe back into chaos, another French Government will fall and the French must admit their mistake.

Only time can determine which of these results the action of France is going to produce.

Convincing evidence of the interest felt by the women of the United States in constructive legislation is

The Twentieth Amendment furnished by the concerted effort now being made by the women voters in many of the states to arouse public sentiment to the point where it will not only support, but demand, the enactment of laws insuring protection to children against commercial greed and exploitation. And it is an encouraging indication, as well, that in the crusade to bring about this national reform the tendency is to disregard partisan lines and affiliations. Indeed, in the north, at any rate, the problem is not a political one. The issue is not one regarding which there could possibly be a division of party sentiment, despite the fact that only in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, two New England states, and in Arizona, has there been an actual increase in child labor during the last ten-year period.

This showing is referred to by those who are seeking to make possible the enactment of a valid federal law in support of their contention that the regulation of child labor cannot safely be left to the various states. Massachusetts, for instance, has set a much higher standard than is maintained by many of the states, but the purpose of the law seems to have been defeated by self-interest and the greed of employers and parents, emphasized, and often excused, by pressing need.

The purpose of the proponents of this federal legislative plan is to propose what will, if approved, become the Twentieth Amendment to the Constitution. They declare it logically follows the provision granting equal suffrage in all the states, being destined to emancipate yearly from industrial servitude upward of half a million children, just as the Nineteenth Amendment emancipated the women of the Nation from social and political bondage.

But the early realization of this undertaking is not now apparent. There is organized opposition to any plan which will deprive certain industries of the cheap labor which now makes possible the taking of unfair profits. Twice has the highest court of the land rendered null and void what had been supposed to be water-tight enactments designed to accomplish exactly what is now attempted by a slower process. No one supposes that the court, on its own motion, would have gone to any such lengths. Urging it on to a conclusion that could not be avoided were those selfish interests which sought to retain their hold upon the helpless workers in the fields and factories. They are the only active opponents of the program which the thoughtful women of the United States have so courageously outlined.

CHANNING POLLOCK, the author of the thought-compelling play, "The Fool," told the members of the Drama

the Press

League of Boston some interesting and suggestive truths the other day. Mr. Pollock's play has, by its phenomenal success, amazed all the wise managers who sternly guard the stage against the intrusion of dramatists who seek any higher purpose than to amuse. It took him months to write it, but years to get it produced. After the production had been accomplished and the stage against the description and been accomplished and description had been accomplished.

duction had been accomplished and a brief time given for the theater-going public to discover what sort of a play it was, the house was crowded nightly, and the unusual expedient of daily matinées was established to accommodate the public.

In commenting upon these facts the dramatist said:

It is like the New York newspaper that had been printing lurid comic supplements for years, with distorted colorings and execrable English, and finally on one Sunday gave away a copy of one of Whistler's paintings. Because its readers did not appreciate it, they said that the taste of the public had deteriorated. The fact of the matter was that the people who appreciate such things as Whistler's paintings had left off buying that newspaper many years before.

This anecdote illustrates a fact applicable alike to journalism and to theatrical management. The minds of the people can be educated to appreciate all that is best in literature, art, and life, or all that is worst. It so happens that for a considerable period of years a great part of the genius and energy devoted to the management of theaters and to the publication of newspapers has been spent in the endeavor to educate the public mind to that which is worst. Sometimes a sudden success, like Mr. Pollock's play, opens the eyes of the managers to the fact that they are misdirecting their energies. Just at present the campaign in favor of clean journalism, which is in progress throughout the United States, and which recently found its most vigorous expression in the demands of organizations representing 300,000 women in California that the papers of that State clean up their columns, calls the attention of newspaper publishers to their activities on the wrong track.

In journalism it is demonstrated that the newspapers seeking circulation because of their sensational qualities have but dissipated their means, their energies, and such intellectual qualities as their producers possess year after year in more feverish efforts to increase the measure of their sensationalism. Their circulation has continuously to be stimulated and practically to be bought anew. The circulation of newspapers founded upon truth and decency is the type of circulation that adheres to its favorite paper year after year with unabated loyalty. It is not difficult to draw from both journalistic and theatrical history illustrations of the fact that decency pays, not only in self-respect, but in cash. There is every reason to believe that the lesson is being more definitely taught now than at any time in the past decade.

THERE have been always two schools of opinion regarding criticism of music and drama. One is that the

critic is a reporter, who should tell what happened and how the audience liked it. The other is that the critic should pass artistic judgment on a work and its performance. The farther you get from metropolitan scenes, the more you will find the former theory in vogue; the nearer to the centers, the more the latter. Why, it is often asked, does

ter. Why, it is often asked, does a certain reviewer seem so hard to please, when the musical public is delighted? And who is he, anyhow, that he should presume to dismiss in a few words a work or a performance that may have taken months or years to create or achieve?

As for the first question, the reviewer himself no doubt greatly enjoys a recital by Kreisler, for example. But what can he write in laudation that has not already been written many times? He can only pay passing tribute to the greatness of the violinist's art, possibly point out a flaw here and there—and then complain that the audience warmed to the least musical number. Or, if a lesser artist be in hand, the position is more difficult. To the occasional listener at any first-class concert, the performance must seem remarkable. It is; there are many organizations and individuals who rarely give anything less than a remarkable performance.

But the reviewer hears such performances day after day over a period of years. He can hardly rhapsodize. He quickly detects raggedness; he readily recognizes differences of interpretation which may or may not seem justifiable to him. He points these things out. The critic's creative work is to expose insincerity, urge on strugglers, encourage leaders. It is not his intention to be hypercritical; it is his desire, if he takes his work seriously, to help to improve art and taste.

As for the second question, the reviewer in most instances is strictly limited as to space. He must say what he has to say as briefly as possible. As to his right to express judgments, that must depend on the judgment of time on his opinions. His views should not be taken too much to/heart; often in history the critics have been wrong. There is much truth in the overstatement that criticism is nothing but the expression of a personal opinion. It is only that; except that the opinion is based on study and experience, and, above all, on the critical faculty, without which criticism is indeed vain.

Editorial Notes

WHEN Carl Laurin, Sweden's leading art critic and president of the Society for Art in Schools in that country, initiated a movement a quarter of a century ago to offset the traditional wall maps and blackboards of the schoolroom with works of art by famous artists, possibly he hardly realized himself the importance of the idea he was sponsoring. Today, at any rate, hundreds of public schools in Sweden have received through this society not only high-class reproductions of art, but also original paintings, drawings, sculpture, engravings, and etchings, and the movement has just received a new impetus in a drive to raise nation-wide contributions. In the past twenty years or so, no artist in Sweden has been too busy, famous, or successful in his sales to contribute something of his work to be placed in a common school. Thus original landscape paintings by Anders Zorn, domestic groups by Carl Larsson, landscapes by Prince Eugene, and animal paintings by Bruno Liljefors have been received and placed by the society. The result has been, as might have been expected, an early development of good taste and an increased enjoyment of fine arts among the youth of Sweden.

PAT M. NEFF, Governor of Texas, showed unmistakably, in his message to the members of the Thirty-Eighth Legislature, on which side of the prohibition enforcement question he had ranged himself, and his showing was eminently satisfactory. He struck the keynote in his very first sentence in these words: "The law is the foundation of every government," and from this broad/standpoint built up his case against the illegal liquor traffic, saying in part:

The bootlegger must go. He is an enemy to civilization. Our prohibition laws should be strengthened. Officers who will not enforce this law should be removed from office. Failure to enforce this law weakens all our laws. Public sentiment must swing away from the bootlegger to the side of law and order.

The message concluded with a number of practical recommendations, several of which had to do with this issue. The following is a good example:

An officer takes an oath that he never fought a duel. That is now a relic of barbarism. Substitute for that part of the present oath the obligation that he will not get drunk,

GRANTED that the idea appeals at first sight to the average layman, yet there is a fundamental fallacy underlying the forecast made by Dr. George E. Vincent, president of the Rockefeller Foundation, in his speech on preventive medicine in St. Louis, Mo., when he said: "We shall soon be paying doctors as we now pay lawyers—a retainer fee by the year—to prevent sickness in the family. They will visit the home at certain intervals and by examinations will prevent, instead of cure, disease." If it were an incontrovertible fact that all physical disability could be prevented by medical measures, doubtless all would favor them, but today there are tens of thousands who believe-and feel that they have abundant reason for believing—that this is not the case, and that the initiation of such a scheme as Dr. Vincent advocates would result in the exactly opposite consequences from those expected. Medical autocracy, after all, is different only in form from military, ecclesiastical, or any other autocracy, and there is no place for it in a democracy. + + +

Construction along the Lincoln Highway planned for the season of 1923 will leave less than fifty miles of unpaved road out of the first 1100 west of New York City. This means that west of Salt Lake City, Utah, remains the only serious barrier to through travel between the two coasts, the difficulties of proper road con-struction between Salt Lake City and Reno being considerable. Financial assistance has already been extended to Wyoming, Utah, and Nevada to aid in the early elimination of the more difficult sections, and though the trail today is rough in places west of Salt Lake City, once the seventeen miles of desert is bridged no conditions exist which will at any time in the summer prevent through travel. From Reno or Carson City to San Francisco is a good road. When it is remembered that in 1913 the Lincoln Highway was a red line traced on the map, the estimated completion of which as a thoroughfare was reckoned as twenty years, it will be realized that wonderful progress has been accomplished.

BOTH the friends of the League of Nations and its opponents must surely recognize equally the work which it has done in helping to rescue Austria from its state of financial collapse, for it was no mean accomplishment which was announced to the Council of the League by the Earl of Balfour the other day, when he said that Austria's financial salvation was virtually an accomplished fact. This means that the League has been instrumental in obtaining from the nations of Europe a guarantee for the loan of 650,000,000 gold crowns needed by Austria, and that hereafter Austria can start on its upward march toward normality again. It is no wonder that the Austrian Chancellor declared that the successful progress of the League's efforts had "revived the sunken hopes of the Austrian people."

Two apparent instances of simple chance have helped to endow Antwerp, the Belgian port from which the last of America's troops sailed homeward the other day, with the physical advantages it is enjoying today. Until before the twelfth century, that is to say, it was an inconsequential inland village on a sluggish creek. Then one day a sea storm, washing away a ridge of sand dunes, gave it a broad estuary with a deep tide and turned a long, tortuous channel into a short, straight one. Even with this advantage, however, the town remained relatively unimportant because of the competition of Bruges. Later on the channel of Bruges silted up, and Antwerp started to come into its own. Today it is probably surpassed in the whole world as a port only by London, New York and Liverpool.
